Master programs (Master of Arts)

According to the regulation for master studies at the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences either two subjects or a master study program must be chosen. In master studies with two subjects, these two subjects can basically be freely combined. However, none of them may be a curricular option or a major (as regards content) of the other subject (combinations that are not possible are: German Language and Literature/German Literature, History/East European History). One of the two subjects can be an extra-faculty subject. Only the extra-faculty subject Geography can be combined with another extra-faculty subject. In that case, the master thesis must be written in Geography.

Subjects at other universities

As part of a Master's degree program at the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences at the University of Basel, it is possible, on request, to study a subject not offered by the University of Basel at another university. A learning agreement must be submitted with the application specifying the curriculum structure, the credit points to be earned, the associated examinations and assessments, and how the final grade is calculated for the subject. The faculty grants the student permission subject to the approval of the other university. Subjects studied outside the University of Basel are not listed in the application. In this situation, any subject offered by the University of Basel should be selected and the Student Administration Office must then be informed in writing (www.unibas.ch/studseksupportEN).
